

Stanford eCorner

Change yourself constantly

Chong-Moon Lee, Ambex Venture Group

February 15, 2006

Video URL: <http://ecorner.stanford.edu/videos/1445/Change-yourself-constantly>

According to Lee, you have to keep changing yourself constantly to be successful. He explains that the more you know the world, the more informed decisions you will be able to make.

Transcript

You have to keep changing yourself constantly. If you don't do it, you cannot be successful because you'll make a decision to the level as much as you know. When you have more knowledge, you see further. For example, when you walk in dark night, you will need a flashlight. When you ride a bike in the dark night, you probably need a candle or flashlight. When you drive automobile, you have to see at least 1000 feet out light on. When it comes to airplane four miles front light half light, the engine size lighting up the distance. Let them come to you. How much you know the world, how much you know how this world functions, you can make better decisions.